From the Daily Journal, 2d inst. Democratic Meeting.

Upon a very brief notice, the Court House here was crowded last evening by citizens assembled to listen to Democratic speaking. The meeting was to have been held at Major Walker's Yard, but the place was changed at the last moment from a knowledge that a lady in the immediate vicinity was seriously, if not dangerously ill. and might be prejudicially affected by the noise.

Robert Strange, Esq., being loudly called upon, addressed the meeting in a very able speech of about an hour in length. He commenced by referring to the alarming position of affairs-turned to a survey of the parties now appealing to the Southern people for their support. He showed how, under whatever name, the Southern Opposition, now known as the "Union" party, was, after all, only another name for the old Whig

He reviewed the history of that party from the days of 1836 downwards, showing how the abolition element had controlled its action. How the great body of Northern Whigs then had voted against the Pinckney resolutions, denying the power of Congress to abolish slavery in the District of Columbia, while nearly all the Northern Democrats had voted for these resolutions. The same with the Atherton resolutions in 1837 or '38 .-These resolutions forbade the reception or consideration of the Abolition petitions with which Congress was flooded; the ground taken being that Congress had no not a man of them who, if he were to answer candidly, Constitutional power over the subject matter—could not | would not be forced to admit, as Dr Keen, Douglas elecgrant the prayer of the petitioners without violating the | tor in the sixth district, did in a speech at Yadkinville, Constitution, and that the right of petition did not ex- Yadkin County, "that Douglas stands no chance," tend to the right to ask for a violation of the Constitu- and to acknowledge that he, (Dr. Keen) is aiding in hotel

In 1844, Henry Clay, with all his power, had to sucthat into none of it slavery should ever be admitted .-This was the object of the Wilmot proviso. Gen. Taylor secured the support of the Whig party by pledging ably all of them seen the "certificate of character' himself against the exercising the veto power, so that the | given him by Mr. Thad. Stevens, who is as black opponents of the South were prepared to take him, republican as anybody wants. Mr. Stevens says: pose his veto.

In 1850 the so-called Compromise was passed, including among its measures the Fugitive Slave Law. Mr. Fillmore, after much hesitation and consultation with his Attorney General, signed that bill, and for that he was thrown overboard in 1852, and Gen. Scott put forward, evidently by the influence of Seward and Company. The Southern Whigs squirmed but submitted. Scott was beaten. The Whig party died out, or rather separated. The Northern portion became the Free Whig leaders, as its leaders. With these facts self-evident-too evident to be gainsaid or disproved-the Democratic party is charged with having brought this Free Soil Republican party into existence, by the repeal of the Missouri Compromise in 1854. How could what was done in 1854 be chargeable with what existed long before. Nay, further, how could 1854 be charged with the acts of 1850. The Territories of Utah and New Mexico, one partly and the other whoffy above the Missouri Compromise line, were supplied with governments expressly providing for them the right to come into the Union with or without slavery, as they might select .-The acts of 1854 merely carried out the spirit of the acts of 1850. If any were chargeable, Clay and Webster, and Calhoun and Cass, and all the men of 1850, were chargeable. Mr. Strange examined the doctrine of Squatter Sovereignty, and exposed its falsity. He proceeded to vindicate, in an unanswerable argument, the great Democratic doctrine of the rights of the States. He showed that they who opposed this doctrine and went for con-Bolidation, were the real disunionists, for the only barrier to aggressions, which must end in dissolution, was presented by the firm attitude of the Democracy in de- John, the Judge allowed $500, each party to pay their fence of the reserved rights of the sovereign States.

He opened by remarking that this was the first occasion he had enjoyed of returning his acknowledgments to his fellow citizens for the very flattering suffrage with which they had been pleased to honor him during the last summer, and also of congratulating his brother Democrats upon the glorious victory which had then perched upon their banners, in the contest which they had been called upon to carry on in this State. He had always been a Democrat when it was looked upon as the next thing to a social disgrace for any man to range himself with the party of the people. When the opposition claimed to have all the education, all the knowledge, and all other things desirable. He had never thought it a disgrace but an honor to belong to a party to perceive right principles, and an honor to his heart to have the manliness to avow and maintain them.

The Democratic party had advanced the country to its present prosperity. It had maintained control of the government during nearly all the years since its formation. How and why was this? Was it through personal favor or personal popularity, or was it through the legitimate- influence of principles approved of by the people? To this there could be but one answer. It was due to their principles, and underlying all these were the principles of State sovereignty and State equality. He showed up the absurd and dangerous conclusions to which the doctrines of the Opposition parties would lead us. Spoke of the right of a State in the last resort to judge of any infringement of her constitutional rights, and also of the mode and measure of re-Secession was a grave and solemn matter.-One only to be contemplated, as before remarked, in the last resort. He said that in his opinion a State had the right of peaceable secession. The tie to bind the Union together must be the love and affection of its members, not force and coercion. He loved the Union as much as any man could. He would not advise secession simply in the event of Lincoln's election, but he would do The spirit of Columbus is fully aroused. all he could to have the State put in a thorough state of preparation to repel any aggression; for, although Lincoln's election might not be an actual aggression, it was a threat, a menace, and there was danger to be apprehended and prepared for. With a reference to the character and claims of the State of North Carolina, Mr. Person concluded a very | we really see nothing wrong : effective address of about an hour long.

After the subsidence of the applause consequent upon Judge Person's remarks, a loud call was made upon Mr.

DuBrutz Cutlar, Esq., President of the Young Men's | Electoral Ticket. Democratic Association, stated that he had the honor to announce that our very able and highly esteemed Elector for the State at Large, Ed. Graham Haywood, Saturday evening, either in this place (the Court House) or at such other place as may be designated, of which due notice will be given. He trusted that his fellow citizens would sustain him in pledging to Mr. Haywood a full audience and a respectful and attentive hearing.—

The announcement was received with much enthusiasm. John L. Holmes, Esq., was next called to the stand. He wanted to excuse himself on account of the lateness of the hour. The crowd would take no excuse. So Mr. Holmes proceeded for some time with one of the best rallying speeches we have heard for some time, and concluded by proclaiming himself ready to work for the success of the party at any moment between now and the closing of the polls on Tuesday next.

With three cheers, and a tune from the band, the meeting adjourned in the best of spirits.
